PREFACE

In lieu of a traditional quinquennial census of population and housing, Danmarks Statistik in 1976 conducted a register-based population census which does not comprise housing data. The census builds on data obtained from central administrative registers, viz. the Central Population Register (CPR), the registers of the withholding-tax system, the Central Register of Enterprises and Establishments and an integrated register of students. The main tools used for combining data on individuals are the person number (CPR number) and the employer code number.

The register-based census is, of course, confined to data on the registers concerned.

Apart from the published census results it is possible to obtain special-purpose tabulations, which can be produced by Danmarks Statistik, subject to a service charge.

The register-based population census as at 1st July 1976 does not include the populations of Greenland and the Faroe Islands. Traditional population and housing censuses were taken in Greenland on 26th October 1976 and in the Faroe Islands on 22nd September 1977.

CONCEPTS AND CLASSIFICATIONS

1. Census population

The census population consists of all persons resident in Denmark on 1 July 1976, according to the records of the Central Population Register (CPR), which derives its data from the local population registers. The population concept is thus the so-called de jure population.

The CPR (and thus the census) includes Danish seamen engaged in voyages in foreign waters, Danish diplomats (and their families) stationed in foreign countries, and Danish residents whose workplace is outside Denmark.

Conversely, the census excludes foreign diplomats (and their families) resident in Denmark, and foreign residents (mainly Swedes and Germans) whose workplace is in Denmark.

2. Demographic characteristics

2a Sex

Information on sex is contained in each person's CPR number (a 10-digit person number employed by the Central Population Register and other registers).

2b Age

The age distributions of the census results refer to completed years of age. For instance, persons aged 0 years are those born in the period 1 July 1975 - 30 June 1976, both days included.

2c Marital status

The population is analysed by marital status, as recorded on the Central Population Register at 1 July 1976. The marital status categories are: single, married, divorced, and widowed. The categories divorced and widowed may be amalgamated to form the category called formerly married.

Separated persons are included in the group of married persons. This is so because there is no systematic updating of CPR data relating to legal separations.

Consensual unions (couples living in a marriage-like relationship without proper marriage documents) are not registered for the census. For persons living in consensual unions the CPR data concerning legal marital status are therefore used.

2d Citizenship

Census information concerning citizenship is obtained from the Central Population Register. In cases where citizenship is not indicated on the CPR, the persons concerned are, to the extent possible, allocated to the continent or part of the world that they come from. If this is not possible either, the persons in question are allocated to a separate group called citizenship not stated. Another separate group is formed by stateless persons.

People with more than one citizenship figure in the CPR with only one citizenship, according to their own choice. However, persons with Danish citizenship always figure as Danes, irrespective of their choice.

2e Place of birth

For persons born in the Kingdom of Denmark, including Greenland and the Faroe Islands, the CPR indicates the birth parish or the local population registration district. The information refers to the place where the birth took place.

For persons born elsewhere, the CPR indicates only the country of birth. For the purposes of the census, persons born outside Denmark are regarded as one group.

3. Geographical characteristics, Administrative areas

3a Municipalities and counties

The division of the nation into municipalities (in Danish: kommuner) and counties (in Danish: amtskommuner) relates to the Danish local government division at census date 1 July 1976.

The population of municipalities and counties is the number of people resident there. For distributions of the population by place of birth, the census figures refer to the actual place of birth, and not the place of residence at that time.

The census does not show the breakdown of the population according to place of work, municipality of work, etc.

3b Parishes

The parish boundaries are those existing at the date of the census. In cases where a parish is situated in more than one municipality, it is indicated as: Sogn, del af (Parish, part of). Parishes with under 50 inhabitants are allocated to neighbouring parishes.

3c Districts and sub-districts

Parishes are used as the smallest administrative areas in all Denmark, except in the municipality of Copenhagen, in which districts and sub-districts are used (those existing at the date of the census).

3d Copenhagen region

The Copenhagen region comprises the municipalities of Copenhagen and Frederiksberg and the counties of Copenhagen, Roskilde and Frederiksborg.

4. Geographical characteristics, Urban areas and rural districts

4a Urban areas

An urban area is a continuously built-up area with at least 200 inhabitants at the time of the census. The term continuously built-up is understood to mean that the distance between houses does not exceed 200 metres, except owing to public parks, churchyards, athletic grounds, industrial plants, etc.

Up to and including the 1970 census, chartered towns were regarded as wholly urban, whether or not part of their area failed to comply with the above-mentioned definition. For the 1976 census, the urban area definition is generally applied to the areas of these previously chartered towns too.

The Copenhagen metropolitan area (Hovedstadsområdet), consists of the municipalities of Copenhagen and Frederiksberg, the county of Copenhagen (excluding the municipalities of Ishøj and Ledøje-Smørum) and the municipalities of Birkerød, Farum and Hørsholm (in the county of Frederiksborg). The Copenhagen metropolitan area is regarded as wholly urban, irrespective of actual circumstances.

4b Size-classes of urban areas and rural districts

For the purposes of the census, the urban areas are grouped as follows:

- 1) The Copenhagen metropolitan area
- 2) Other urban areas with 10 000 or more inhabitants
- 3) Urban areas with 2 000 - 9 999 inhabitants
- 4) Urban areas with 200 - 1 999 inhabitants

Which leaves:

- 5) Rural districts.

This breakdown meets the recommendations of the U.N. Statistical Commission, according to which 1) and 2) (population 10 000 and over) are regarded as urban, and 3) (population 2 000 - 9 999) as semi-urban, and 4) and 5) (population under 2 000) as rural areas.

5. Family characteristics

5a The family concept

For the purposes of the census, a family is defined as a family nucleus, i.e. a group of family members living at the same address. Such groups are ascertained in the Central Population Register by means of a so-called cross-reference number which is attached to an individual in addition to his or her own CPR number. The cross-reference numbers provide links between 1) spouses and 2) parents and their children under 18 years old.

A family nucleus may consist of:

- 1) A married couple with their children (if any) aged under 18 years and living at the same address,
- 2) A single person aged 18 years or more with his/her children (if any) aged under 18 years and living at the same address,

- 3) A single person aged under 18 years with one or more children of his/her own living at the same address,
- 4) An actually separated, legally separated, divorced or widowed person with his/her children (if any) aged under 18 years and living at the same address.

Single persons under 18 years old who do not live with their parents or for other reasons have no cross-reference number, are not considered separate family nuclei (only if they have children of their own living with them). In the census text these persons are sometimes found under the designation "other children" (børn i øvrigt). However, single persons aged 18 years or more who live with their parents are singled out as separate family nuclei.

Two persons living in a consensual union are treated as two family nuclei (two non-married persons with or without children).

5b Children

Single persons under 18 years old who live with their parents (including adoptive parents) are part of their parents' family nucleus, except after childbirth when young women no longer have CPR cross-reference numbers to their parents and are regarded as separate family nuclei together with their children, even if they go on living at their parents' address.

"Other children" include persons under 18 years old whose absence from their parents' home is of a permanent nature, due to gainful employment, further education, private care elsewhere or voluntary or compulsory placing outside the home.

6. Occupational characteristics, Economic activity status

6a Basis and sequence of the classification

All persons aged 16 years and over are classified by economic activity status on the basis of the following information: 1) personal income for 1976, according to registers of the withholding-tax system, 2) industrial and ownership conditions for 1976, according to the Central Register of Enterprises and Establishments, 3) occupation, according to Central Population Register data updated by means of personal tax returns for 1976, and 4) any education received in 1976, according to an integrated register of students.

First, the population is broken down into two main groups:

- 1) The economically active population, and
- 2) The economically inactive population.

The main criterion for this breakdown is the size of annual income. The principal rule is that persons with earned income upwards of kr. 15 000 are considered economically active, provided that the earned income is higher than the amount of any public pension received. Supplementary rules apply to self-employed persons, whose incomes may fluctuate substantially.

A woman having "income as assisting wife" (income from work in her self-employed husband's enterprise) is always classified to the economically active group.

Successive classification is then effected in the following sequence, items 1-3 being the economically active population, and items 4-7 being the economically inactive population (aged 16 years and over):

- 1) Self-employed
- 2) Assisting wives
- 3) Employees
- 4) Pensioners
- 5) Students
- 6) Home-makers
- 7) Others not economically active.

Successive classification implies that for each group only that part of the population is considered who have not already been admitted to a preceding group. Thus "employees" consist of a residual group of economically active persons who have been tested and rejected for admission to the groups of self-employed and assisting wives.

In cases where a person qualifies for admission to more than one group (e.g. a self-employed person having also worked as employee in 1976) the person is classified to the preponderant group, i.e. the group which is judged to be his/her principal activity group.

6b Economically active population

Self-employed are persons who figure as owners on the Central Register of Enterprises and Establishments, and whose net income from self-employment exceeds any income as employee. This is the main rule of classification, but there are other rules designed to eliminate the effect of year-to-year fluctuations in the incomes of the self-employed.

For persons who own business units jointly with others, classification as self-employed presupposes a somewhat higher personal income from self-employment.

Some self-employed persons are not to be found on the Central Register of Enterprises and Establishments. They are people who own an enterprise without employees, the enterprise not being liable to value-added tax. These self-employed persons are classified on the basis of information on the Central Population Register.

Assisting wives are female spouses who to a substantial extent participate in the activities of enterprises owned by their male spouses or by both spouses. They are classified on the basis of information on the Central Population Register.

Employees are other persons whose wages or salaries amount to kr. 15 000. or more for the year 1976 (the main rule).

Persons with both employee income and income from self-employment are classified as employees if the employee income is the higher and if they have paid full-year contributions to the Labour Market Supplementary Pension Fund (ATP).

Moreover, the group of employees also comprises some people who do not actually comply with the above-mentioned classification rules, but who have an annual income over kr. 15 000 in the form of compensation or remuneration payments such as sick-day benefit or unemployment benefit.

6c Economically inactive population

Pensioners are persons receiving public pension payments, such as old-age, disablement or widow pension benefits.

For technical reasons, persons receiving private pension payments without at the same time receiving public pension payments are not classified as pensioners.

Students are economically active persons aged 16 years and over, who received education or training for more than six months in 1976.

Information on the kind of education received has not been sought for the census.

In the tables, students are indicated as such. Economically active persons may also be students, and they are indicated in the tables as "tillige under uddannelse" (also receiving education).

Home-makers are mostly housewives without gainful employment who are taxed jointly with their husbands.

Others not economically active are for example income recipients (independent persons) whose earned income is under kr. 15 000 and who do not receive public pension payments; home-makers of couples who are not legally married; and persons aged 16 and over having completed school education and not having continued into further education or gainful employment.

0-15 year old population (children) are considered economically inactive for the purposes of the census, irrespective of their actual working status.

6d Employment status

For the breakdown of the economically active population into employment status groups, the following six main groups are distinguished:

- 1) Self-employed
- 2) Assisting wives
- 3) Salary earners
- 4) Skilled wage earners
- 5) Unskilled wages earners
- 6) Employees, not further specified

Between them, groups 3), 4), 5) and 6) comprise all employees. These are allocated among the four groups on the basis of their occupations, as stated on the Central Population Register. For the occupations covered by groups 3), 4) and 5), see Annex 3. Group 6) is a residual group.

6e Socio-economic groups

The socio-economic classification of the economically active population is derived from the classification by industry and the classification by employment status. For the self-employed and for managers, the size (in terms of employment) of their firm is also taken into consideration.

In addition there are the following groups for the economically inactive population:

- 1) Pensioners
- 2) Students
- 3) Home-makers (housewives, etc.)
- 4) Others not economically active
- 5) 0-15 year old population (children)

7. Industrial characteristics, Industry

7a Coding of industry

The information required for the industrial coding of the self-employed and of assisting wives is obtained from the Central Register of Enterprises and Establishments (as a main rule). Self-employed persons who are not on that register are coded with reference to their occupations as indicated on the Central Population Register.

As regards employees, the relevant information can also be obtained from the Central Register of Enterprises and Establishments. This is so because the employers (enterprises, establishments, etc.) furnish annual declaration notes concerning the income of their employees, for the benefit of the taxation authorities. Each declaration note states the CIR number ("Employer number") of the individual employee's firm, and because the CIR number is the employer's identification code number with the Central Register of Enterprises and Establishments, it is possible to link the employee to the kind of activity (industry) in which he/she is employed. Employees having had more than one employer during the year are coded to the industry of the employer where the largest income has been earned.

The coding of the employed population refers to the code numbers of Danmarks Statistik's industrial classification system, which builds on the 1968 version of the Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities (ISIC).

Thus the employed population is classified in conformity with the principal activity of their firm (enterprise) and not to the activities of its local units (establishments), which may differ from the principal activity. For example, an enterprise chiefly engaged in wholesaling may have some local manufacturing plants, whose employees are therefore coded as persons whose industry is wholesaling.

A similar problem concerns the coding of public sector employees. The employees of a local government are registered with the tax administration under the CIR number of the local government authority, and they are all coded to local government administration, whether they are engaged in education, transport, administration or other activities. And the staff of the Danish State are all coded to one activity category termed central government administration, provided that they are paid by the same central payments office.

7b The industrial classification

Danmarks Statistik's industrial classification system of 1 April 1977 is used, except for main code 9, services, for which there is a supplementary breakdown by ownership. Among the government owned activities the following are particularly distinguished: 1) central government owned, 2) local government owned, and 3) other activities of a public nature which may or may not be government owned, such as welfare institutions like kindergartens, nurseries and institutions in the education sector. A further breakdown has not been possible, as for example all activities of a local government (county or municipality) are coded to the CIR number (employer number) of that local government. The three groups include the entire main group 4: Electricity, gas and water.

The information concerning ownership conditions is found in the Central Register of Enterprises and Establishments.

As regards the "private" services of main code 9, their classification follows Danmarks Statistik's industrial classification system, and thus the ISIC.

For more information concerning the contents of the group Government services, etc., see Annexes 1 and 2.

Moreover, the industry categories manufacturing, construction and retail trade have been analysed by size of enterprise, so that firms with 0-4 employees form the group called small firms, and firms with 5 or more employees form the group referred to as other firms. The information concerning size is based on the firms' contributions towards the compulsory pension scheme for their employees, as recorded in the files of the Central Register of Enterprises and Establishments.

8. Deviations from previous censuses

8a General remarks

The register-based population census for 1976 differs in various ways from previous censuses, which have all been based on questionnaires returned by the individual person/household. Differences in scope, content and definition mean that not all results of the 1976 census are comparable with the results of earlier censuses.

Purely demographic data, such as sex, age, marital status and geographic distributions, are not affected, being defined largely as in previous censuses and relating to the same day (1 July 1976).

The deviations are primarily found in the data on activity status, industry and occupation.

8b Economic activity status

For the 1976 census the activity status relates to the entire calendar year, as it is determined by the type or source of income which has been preponderant for 1976. For the 1970 population census and for earlier censuses, the activity status related to the date of the census or to what was considered the normal situation.

8c Industrial classification

The industrial distribution of the Danish population, according to the 1976 census, relates to the industry (principal activity) of the enterprise (legal unit), as this is the kind of information that can be obtained from registers. The results of censuses for 1970 and earlier years indicate distributions relating to the local units of enterprises. This difference in compilation methods affects the industrial distribution of employees, whereas it does not affect the self-employed, whose industry is invariably that of their enterprise.

As regards the time element, the 1970 census refers to the industrial distribution at the time of the census, whereas the 1976 census refers to the year as a whole.

Danmarks Statistik's industrial classification system of 1 April 1977, which builds on the 1968 revision of the ISIC, was used for the 1976 census. This system replaces a classification system based on the 1958 version of the ISIC which was used for the 1970 census. The change in nomenclature means that especially a number of service activities (with a relatively large number of self-employed) which were previously considered part of manufacturing, are transferred to other industry categories, especially retail trade, repairing and other services.

Owing to the restricted potentials for industrial analysis of government activities in 1976, the industrial groups of the register-based census are not directly comparable with those of the 1970 census.

8d Occupational classification

The occupational categories of the register-based census consist of occupations which are uniform in respect of one or more of the concepts of work function, level of employment, and education background. For the 1970 census, a classification by trades, or skills, was used, in order to classify the economically active population to groups performing identical or related work.

In both census types many designations are used which are not easily allocated to a particular field of work, and for the questionnaire-based census the occupational designation is often the reply given to the question regarding trade. However, by comparing the occupational designation with information concerning the type of establishment and any other information available, it is to a large extent possible to code the individual persons to the correct trades. A similar mechanical process cannot be applied to the data of the register-based population census, mainly because the industrial distribution refers to people's enterprises and not the local units (workplaces).

For the register-based census the occupational designations are those of the Central Population Register. Updating of these designations is done by each individual on his/her income tax return, from which the local governments transfer the new information to the CPR via the withholding-tax system. The occupations are therefore those at the time of completing the income tax return form, i.e. mainly in the period up to the 15th February 1977. This is thus in contrast to the rest of the employment data, which relate to 1976 as a whole.

In connection with the 1976 census it has been necessary to perform a number of assessments and inquiries regarding the occupational designations, because of insufficient or unreliable data. For example, many people do not indicate their occupations on the income tax return forms, leaving a large number of persons in the category "employees without further specification". Inquiries based on information concerning size of income and compulsory pension contributions reveal that the category mostly comprises persons who are not permanently part of the labour market population.
